The World Association of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts (WAGGGS) is dedicated to educating and empowering girls and young women in the world. Just as Juliette Low brought our Movement to this country, it also rapidly spread to other countries. In 1919, the concept of an International Council of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts began. Juliette Low attended the First International Conference held at St. Hughes College, Oxford, England. It was here that the U.S. introduced "Taps" to the Girl Guide and Girl Scout Movement. A second conference was held in 1922, and a third conference was held in 1924, along with the first World Camp. Girls from the U.S. attended this worldwide encampment, along with representatives from 40 countries.

In 1928, International Council was replaced by the World Association of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts, now known as WAGGGS. World Conferences occur every three years. They rotate among the continents and hemispheres, and at the same time a World Camp takes place. Girls and adults team up to share meals, camping skills, and international friendship. In 1948, the World Conference returned to New York state at Cooperstown.

Since 1932, Juliette Low Seminars have been held to provide international leadership training for young women, from any member organization, and provide a platform for young women to:

- Share their views and experiences
- Develop a sense of universal citizenship
- Enhance their leadership skills
- Appreciate cultural differences
- Broaden their international understanding and prepare for national and International leadership

SWAPS Denote Friendship

Girl Scouts began exchanging "swaps" as a token of friendship at the First National Girl Scout Roundup in 1956. The intent of a "swap" is to share yourself, your interests, and/or your locale with your new friend.

Originally "swaps" were handmade by the girls themselves. Today, they are more commercial. Handmade baskets, corn husk dolls, and local stitching or weavings are meaningful examples of "swaps." Many of the handmade international items serve as a way of raising money for local villages, communities, or national endeavors for girls. Patches and pins are examples of commercial "swaps." They indicate a program activity or location.

Edith Macy Center

Edith Macy Center

Edith Macy Center is a conference and training facility owned by Girl Scouts of the USA and is located in Briarcliff Manor, New York. The facility lies just outside Briarcliff Manor's boundaries, in the town of Mount Pleasant, and is situated on over 400 acres of woodland. The site has had four names: Camp Edith Macy (C.E.M.) - University In The Woods, Edith Macy Training School, Edith Macy Girl Scout National Center, and since 1982, Edith Macy Conference Center.

The center is named after Edith Carpenter Macy, chair of the Girl Scout National Board of Directors from 1919 to 1925. Land and capital were donated in 1926 as a memorial tribute by her husband, V. Everit Macy, and it honors Mrs. Macy's dream of a permanent Girl Scout instructional facility, staffed and equipped to offer high-quality training and guidance to Girl Scout leaders.

Girl Scout Central/ Girl Scout Headquarters

Girl Scouts of the USA's central headquarters in New York, NY, is headed by a Chief Executive Officer and a 40-member National Board of Directors. Bonnie Barczykowski currently serves as CEO and was officially appointed in February 2023. The President of the National Board of Directors, the highest volunteer position, is Noorain Khan.

Below the national organization are 112 councils, which cover a large portion of a state or geographic region. Some councils own and run camps for the troops within their area of responsibility. Councils are usually subdivided into areas, called neighborhoods, Service Units, or associations (terms vary), which are program delivery areas that consist of troops at all age levels in a smaller area, such as a town. The basic unit is the troop which may or may not be sponsored.
